Farmers and Settlers Newspaper Pty. Ltd., Moor-gate-st., Broadway, Sydney, has presented £5 and Trophy, value £5, to be awarded to the next most successful competitor to the winner of the "Britstand Trophy".

Conditions for Competitors

1. The logs will be any variety of timber and any length approved by the Officials. The diameter of all logs will be uniform for each contest. All logs will be numbered and will be drawn for by the Officials in the presence of the competitors. Slabbing of logs will not be allowed.

2. No entry will be accepted unless accompanied by entry fee.

3. Competitors must state on the certificate of entry a list of their last two years' performances, together with the name of the scratch man and winner.

4. The contests will be chopped or sawed in heats as arranged by the Officials and a final according to the number of competitors. In the event of a competitor scratching from a heat after same has been posted or made public, he shall not be permitted to compete in another heat of the same event.

5. Competitors starting in an event must continue to chop or saw until the first and second logs are chopped or sawn off. Any competitor failing to comply with this rule will be disqualified from competing in any further event in the Show unless he can satisfy the Steward-in-Charge that he had broken his axe or saw or was exhausted.

6. The first and second competitors in each heat shall compete in the final.

7. No competitor will be allowed to make any axe or saw marks on his log, except foot holes for under-hand events, before the gun fires, which constitutes the word "go".

8. No person other than competitors, wedgers, or Officials, will be allowed in the ring during the contest.

9. At the completion of each contest the competitors must remain at their logs until placed by the Judge.

10. Axes or saws must entirely sever logs in two parts; pushing or pulling will disqualify.

11. In Sawing Competitions all saw cuts must be three inches at least from the end of the log.

12. The decision of the Judge in all cases will be final as to places.

13. Competitors must be at their starting places 20 minutes previous to the advertised time of starting, otherwise the heat in which they are competing will be started without them.

14. A competitor will not start until his name has been called by the starter.

15. Competitors must wear white trousers, dark blue jerseys, white boots or shoes. This regulation will be rigidly enforced.

16. Any competitor conducting himself in an unruly manner, conspiring with others to cause discontent, to deceive the Officials, or infringing any of these conditions, may be disqualified or dealt with as the Council may deem fit.

17. The Council may in its absolute and uncontrolled discretion disqualify, eliminate, or otherwise deal with any competitor in any wood-chopping or sawing contest on such grounds as it may think fit and without assigning any reason therefor.

18. All scratchings must be notified to the Secretary on or before Saturday, 12th March, 1949. The Secretary will acknowledge all such scratchings. Should a competitor fail to lodge a scratching in accordance with these provisions, he will incur a penalty of £2.

19. Handicaps and Heats, as far as practicable, will be posted on a Notice Board in the dressing room the day before the event is timed to take place. A competitor who wins a contest after the declaration of handicaps may be re-handicapped for subsequent contests.

Handicapping limits, viz.:—(These times are at the discretion of the Officials). Timber, 12-inch diameter, 25 seconds; 13-inch diameter, 30 seconds; 15-inch diameter, 35 seconds; 24-inch diameter, Double-Handed Sawing Contests, 12 seconds.

WOOD-CHOPPING AND SAWING CONTESTS

The sport-loving Australian gives freely of his admiration for all perfect physical achievement, and the assurance, dexterity, and complete muscular control of the champion axeman draw forth his enthusiasm in full measure. Wood-chopping and sawing contests had their birth in this country — at first in the heart of the tall timbers, when friendly bouts were arranged between rival axemen. It is claimed that the first wood-chop for a cash prize took place at Colac, in Victoria, about 60 years ago. Then, in 1891, a two-day contest was organised at Latrobe, in Tasmania. The next year brought a challenge for a champion, and the prize went to Tom Reeves, using 24" logs. The blocks used to-day for standing and under-hand chops are 10" to 15" in diameter, and for sawing, generally 18" to 24". Interest quickened and under properly organised conditions the contest grew in favour throughout Victoria and Tasmania, then spread to New Zealand, New South Wales, and the other Australian States.

The Royal Agricultural Society of N.S.W. began to see the possibilities of organised contests as an attraction at the Annual Royal Easter Show, and 1906 saw the first inclusion of a wood-chopping and sawing section. The popularity of the events spread to country shows throughout the land. No annual district carnival was complete without its wood-chopping and sawing contest, and the brawny champion from the lumber camp, with his rippling muscles and light, footsure gait, was the hero of many a country youngster's heart, spurring him to greater muscular efforts in emulation. And so, records were made and broken as constant striving for perfection raised the standards of the contests.

With the higher standards came higher rewards — and greater interest from the public. In 1930 the Royal Agricultural Society attracted 30 competitors, and was well satisfied. The 1938 Show brought 150 competitors, and the entries for the contests at the 1948 Royal Easter Show were so numerous that 88 heats, 18 semi-finals and a final were required to accommodate all entrants — and the arena was packed throughout with enthusiastic spectators. The highest award for a contest in 1931 was £10. But to-day the chief event — the 15" handicap standing cut wood-chop — carries prize money of £155, of which the first prize is £100.

All this increased interest through the years required greater organisation on the part of the Royal Agricultural Society, and in 1938, at a cost of £7000, a special wood-chop stadium was erected at the Showground, the finest of its kind in the world. Its capacity is 3500 people and it is fully equipped with dressing rooms, bathrooms, and headquarters for officials.

One of the most spectacular events at the competitions is the tree-felling contest, which was introduced to show city dwellers just how the tall timber is felled. The trees used for the contests are 13" in diameter and are set 3' 0" into the ground. When the contest starts, the axeman cuts a notch 3' 6" from the ground and places a board in it. Standing on this, he cuts a second notch 7' 0" from the ground and places another board therein. A third notch at 10' 6" is then made and, standing on a board placed in this position, he cuts half-way through the tree. Descending, and bringing the boards with him, he then repeats the procedure on the other side of the tree, and from the third position cuts the tree through. The contest is over when the top is cut through.

Since 1938, all world championship wood-chopping and sawing contests have been decided at the Sydney Royal Easter Show.

THE STORY OF TIMBER

WE MAY, as we wander in the bush, cast an appreciative eye upon the pale pinks, greens, greys of the satiny trunks gleaming under the caress of diffused sunlight—or in a comfortable room we may sit easefully before a table of ancient ebony, sipping our coffee the while we glance at the news sheet that comes to us at negligible cost and is accepted as an indispensable part of our daily lives. But how often do we let our minds play around the enormous industrial ramifications lying between the two extremes? Yet, cast up on the banks of the river of time are records and examples of that most beautiful and, to-day, most versatile of substances sufficient to provide a lifetime of study. Timber, by the texture and design of its ring growth, has disclosed the weather cycles of the seasons back to the 13th century. It has wrested the iron wealth from mountains when in days before the machine age, by pouring water over charcoal-heated iron ore, the boulders were split open and reduced to sizes suitable for crushing by hand labour. Mediaeval churches in Europe house richly coloured pictures, not painted but inlaid with rare woods whose tints have withstood the passage of years to bear present witness to the craftsmanship and artistry of the composer, as well as the wide wanderings of the merchants who brought the material from many foreign lands. Nor is this art lost to-day, and in the liner "Queen Elizabeth" may be seen George Ramon's panel depicting the Canterbury Pilgrims' journey, in which mingle the plane tree of England, Scottish pine, bog oak from Ireland, Canadian bird's eye maple, Australian birch, silky oak, and beanwood, Indian teak, laurelwood, and coralwood — to mention but a few of the 66 species of wood that go to make up this beautiful marquetry panel.

The use of wood for paper-making emanated from Germany, where a process was evolved in 1840, and within a few years the manufacture was placed on a commercial basis, thereby making possible the large distribution of cheap newspapers.

The earliest exports of the timber-growing countries were derived from timber — baulks and masts for the shipbuilding industry and tar for caulking the seams. In the 17th and 18th centuries these were the chief articles shipped from the Northern Countries (Finland, Sweden, and Norway); while in America spars, ships' timbers, and lumber were among the first products of the settlers, even before the export of tobacco and other agricultural products. The importance of the industry has in no way diminished in this chemical and mechanical age, and apart from the demand for timber itself, the market for wood products is an ever expanding one. Plywood, with its infinite variety of forms, constitutes an industry on its own, while a review of wood-derivatives discloses a never-ending line of materials: paper, tannic acid for tanning hides, floor tiles and fire logs from sawdust, edible sugar, alcohols, turpentine, rosin, pine oil, cellulose from which again is derived rayon, artificial wool, cellophane, explosives, celluloid, collodian, cellulose lacquer . . . and so one might go on and on.

AUSTRALIAN TIMBER AND ITS USES

For one hundred years Australia's forests and timber tracts were wantonly laid waste in an endeavour to turn all land lying close to watercourses into agricultural areas; the sleeper-cutter laid low the giants of the forests and with broad axe, mawl and wedges, took from the most valuable part of the tree — sleepers for a railway track! and in so doing left 80% of the timber to rot in the bush. In the wake of the ring-barker and the sleeper-cutter came devastation by fire.

The timber resources of the country were not sufficient to withstand such onslaughts, and with depletion came recognition of a problem to be faced. This problem has been attacked scientifically over the past 40 years and to-day the emphasis is on forest conservation, regeneration, and expansion by the study of silviculture generally, by elimination of wastage in modern practice of extraction and greater utilization of timber waste, by forest plantations in non-forest areas, and by strict, organised control of the fire menace.

Australia's exploitable timber area covers approximately 52,775 square miles. Her overseas export of timber for the year ended June, 1948, yielded £A.1,567,000, while timber consumption within the country is in the vicinity of 970,000,000 super feet.

Of this latter figure, however, about half is hardwood, produced locally, and half is softwood mostly imported from Canada, New Zealand, and the U.S.A. Three-quarters of the country's timber production is hardwood; that is to say, timber of the non-coniferous types. Among the most plentiful are jarrah, mountain ash, blackbutt, messmate stringybark, spotted gum, alpine ash, and karri, and their yield ranges from 20,000,000 to 100,000,000 super feet per year; but apart from the constructional timbers Australia has a wide variety of cabinet woods, some of them among the world's most beautiful—silky oak, Queensland maple, Queensland walnut, black bean, blackwood, satin sycamore, to mention but a few.

Of all Australia's achievements in the wood utilization industry, there is no doubt that the greatest lies in the production of paper from hardwood—a venture that met with no approval from experts on paper production in the older countries where softwood was accepted as the only suitable type of timber for this use. Over twenty years of research, at a cost of £250,000, went into the job of perfecting a process for the manufacture of paper from local timbers, and the industry now produces 85,000 tons of paper a year. But the trials, failures, rebuffs, and rewards that went therewith represent a tale requiring separate telling.

THE IDEAL AXE

Keesteel tells its Story

"An axe? Surely a very practical, workaday article", you think. With its beginnings in the stone age it has been the most familiar aid of man for so long that one is apt to accept it with no further thought. But the axe has its story . . . To-day it flashes with unerring precision in the hands of a champion axeman; it is but a short while since, in a fiery cauldron, it glowed as a shining orange light of delicate, shimmering beauty.

Among the outstanding axes in use at wood-chopping contests to-day, along with those used in all competitions held at Shows throughout the country, Keesteel Racing Axes are unique of their kind. Here, in brief, is their story:

The company of Keech Castings Pty. Ltd. opened its factory in 1933 for the manufacture of specialty castings, but with the coming of war all production was switched to essential munitions, principally hand grenades and Bren Gun sprockets. The success achieved in this very important manufacture led to the question: "Could the factory produce the badly needed tools for tradesmen—in particular, the axe, of which the market was completely bare?" The Company accepted the challenge, and produced the first axes ever made on a production basis in the Southern Hemisphere; but axes with a difference!

This was a new organisation, setting out on a manufacture new to the country and untrammelled by the theories and beliefs that go hand in hand with the advantages of tradition. Heretofore, edged tools had always been forged, a process having its limitations and necessitating much cumbersome machinery — indeed, this method is still used by all other tool manufacturers here and abroad. A period of intensive research by Keesteel brought success in the production of a steel so improved in character that, for the first time in history, edged tools of the highest quality could be made by mould casting. The results were revolutionary — the Keesteel process, completely evolved and developed in Australia by Australians, made it possible to produce quality tools cheaper than ever before. Hammers, tinsnips, tailors' shears (all tools of trade requiring high quality alloy steels) began to pour off the production lines. But research does not stop with the first flush of success, nor was the ideal axe evolved overnight.

Improvement suggestions from the best known champion axemen keep company with constant research in the workshops and laboratories. From the smelting and reclamation of the pure metals, to the packing and labelling of the cases, all the work is integrated under the one roof, making possible the closest co-operation. Chemists test each batch of metal to assure perfect balance of components. Craftsmen produce the patterns from which the sand casting moulds are made, and metal workers equipped with ingeniously contrived buckets on wheels direct the streams of fiery liquid into the moulds by means of 10-foot control rods which keep them at all times at a safe and comfortable distance from the heated metal. Axe handles, produced on the premises from the finest American hickory, are designed for perfect balance and strength. The whole process carried out in large, airy premises, is so quick and efficient that its economy is a natural corollary — and the result is a demand in Australia for 3000 Keesteel axes per week; a demand greater than has ever been enjoyed by any other maker of axes.

This is the story of the cast axe; a story which has its culmination in the Keesteel axe being used in this wood-chopping arena to-day; an axe which, by reason of its use, requires stronger steel than does any other known type of tool; so strong that it will cut steel and is, to all intents and purposes, unbreakable; an axe in truth to satisfy the demands of the Australian timberman whose work lies amongst the world's hardest timbers — the KEE-STEEL RACING AXE!

The manufacturers of this axe, through the medium of this booklet, send the best of wishes to all competitors in the wood-chopping and wood-sawing contests at the Royal Easter Show, 1949.

TIMBER-GETTING

The timber-getting industry has come a long way since the days when the axe — stone or iron — was the only means of bending the resources of the forest to the will of man. But through all the years the axe has endured, and emerges to-day — improved in efficiency and durability, but little changed in design — as indispensable to the lumberman as it was to his earliest forebears. Around the 15th century came water-driven sawmills to aid the axe, but it was not until the introduction of steam in the 18th century that the timber industry really came into its own, especially in those countries lying within the conifer belt — Norway, Sweden, Finland, Canada, and parts of America. Towards the end of the 19th century, in America's larger mills, the circular saw was largely supplanted by the band saw and to-day band saws, double-cutting band saws, and band re-saws — both vertical and horizontal — with, in addition, gang saws to increase the output, are the accepted rule.

Much modern machinery is designed to deal with the timber on the forest site. Small gasoline or electric motor-powered chain saws assist the axeman in felling the tree — an invention born of necessity for, with the gradual depletion in the ranks of Scandinavians, who had represented almost entirely the lumbermen of Canada in the early part of the first world war, steps had to be taken to overcome the shortage of manpower for tree felling, and it is claimed that the idea and development of the power chain saw actually took place in the offices of the British Columbia Logging Association in Vancouver. These chain saws are designed for operation by one or two men, and they do the work in half the time taken by the manual cross-cut saw. Then there are the portable and semi-portable all-steel saw edgers and trimmers, and even up-to-date complete portable sawmills which may be moved easily from site to site as the timber is cut out.

Opp. : Championship wood-sawing contest—Sydney.

Transportation of timber from the forests presented a problem for the early timber-getters that was solved by floating the logs down swiftly-flowing streams and rivers. Upon reaching lakes or broad river mouths, the logs were lashed together to form rafts and were guided to their destination in large groups. This custom has been in use from the earliest times and is still largely the means of transporting the logs from the forests in the Northern Countries of Europe and in Canada—and the prowess of the stalwart log driver has been the romantic theme of song and story for generations. In countries where river-driving was not possible, the equally colourful “bullocky” supplied the transport, but he, with his long whip, drooping moustaches and patient plodding team of bullocks, has mooched right out of the picture, giving place to the varied types of up-to-date mechanical transport equipment now used to move the heavy logs quickly and efficiently, without ploughing up the soil or tearing down the young timber in so doing. Among these are the tractor-drawn Hyster sulky, which bears the logs suspended from an elevated axle-arch, and rail track type waggons with interchangeable pneumatic tyres for running on or off tracks as the condition of the terrain demands; also lift trucks that push their levers under the load and hoist, transport and stack the sawn timber; skidder-loader machines—the list is endless.
